The Valparaiso of Virginia.

To the editor of the Washington Chronicle:

FALLS CHURCH, June 4, 1873.—The old proverb that "God made the country but man made the town," impresses itself upon the sensibilities of thousands of city people at this particular season of the year.

One of your citizens visited our pleasant valley a short time since, and although he had travelled over the continent and beheld the charming scenery and the gorgeous sun sets of the Orient, he expressed delight as he stood on "Prospect Hill," the centre, as it were, of a grand natural amphitheatre, and there gazed out upon a landscape, varied in its general features by hills and vales and babbling brooks, and dotted all over with cottages, orchards, vineyards, flowers, evergreens of every variety, with every now and then beautiful groves of forest trees, with the classic Potomac, the hills of Maryland and the Capitol in full view in one direction, and in another the fine rests upon the Blue Ridge, and Fairfax Seminary, and in another are believed extensive forests, in which the wild deer, the bear, the fox, and other wild game abound, and through which sportsmen at certain seasons of the year love to roam. And now the golden rays of the setting sun, and the silver lining of the floating clouds awakened new emotions, and he impressed us with the fact that from the fair fields of Italy no scene more beautiful could the eye behold. And in the calm, silver moonlight of the evening the whistling broke pleasantly upon his ear, disturbed only by merry songs of the picnic parties, many of whom had angled successfully for trout in the sparkling streams that abound in the valley, all of which contrasted charmingly with the noise and bustle of city life.

Contrary to his usual custom, our friend, on the following morning, arose at break of day, and, as old Sol rose in splendor over the eastern hills and spread his mantle of glory over all nature, the dew grass and foliage sparkling in the glad sunlight, the air reberberating with the sweet song of birds, and the atmosphere fragrant with the odors of a thousand varieties of flowering plants, he went forth, and, looking down upon it, that bright, beautiful morning, impressed him more than ever with the fact that God did indeed make the country. And then, instead of his usual city appetizer, the morning walk in the pure air proved a good substitute, and he came to the breakfast table with an eagerness and capacity which the bountiful larder of his hostess fully satisfied, and it was very evident that city life had no tendency to lessen one's appreciation of pure sweet milk and cream, fresh butter, fresh fruits, new home-made bread, golden corn cakes, with trout, partridge, lamb, &c., cooked in style to satisfy the most sensitive epicure. These he found to be among the thousand blessings enjoyed in a country home. Our friend will spend the summer with us, and we trust the charm of country life will induce him to build up a home in our midst.

LONGEVITY OF BIRDS.—Among the feathered creation the eagle and raven, the swan and parrot, are each centenarians. An eagle kept in Vienna died after a confinement of one hundred and fourteen years, and on an ancient oak in Selborne, still known as the "raven tree," the same pair of ravens are believed to have fixed their residence for a series of more than ninety years. Swans upon the river Thames, about whose age there can be no mistake, since they are annually picked by the Tintner's Company, under whose keeping they have been for five centuries, have been known to survive one hundred and fifty years and more. The melody of the dying swan is entirely mythological. Upon approach of death the bird quits the water, sits down upon the bank, lays its head upon the ground, expands its wings a trifle, and expires, uttering no sound.

The extreme longevity of the parrot is equally authentic. In the Zoological Gardens of London there is a macaw that was admitted to the tower in the year 1764. At Versailles, during the reign of Charles X., there was always hanging in a cage in the Orangerie, which contained a parrot purchased by the Regent Orleans for the Duchess de Berri. There is not a collection of birds in any of the royal aviaries of Europe that has not its ancient parrot. The writer purchased a gray African parrot in 1856, whose residence in Wales was authenticated for seventy-seven years. The bird, more wonderful for variety of speech than for her age, learning everything and forgetting nothing, accomplished alike in the Welsh tongue and the English, bore in Africa, living more than three quarters of a century in Europe, and dying in America, might have been alive now but for heedlessness. In 1857 she had certainly approached, if she had not reached and passed her one hundredth year. Upon a severely cold night in December of that year she was sent from New York to Washington, and perished by the way. She was in perfect health, had never known a day of sickness, showed no decrepitude, enjoyed life to the utmost, demanded no allowances or concessions on the score of advanced years, and might, but for an exposure to the rigor of an unaccustomed climate, have been alive to-day.

A GIRL WHO NEVER SAW A YOUNG MAN.—An old girl who lives near St. Helena, Cal., in a wild solitude, has a very pretty daughter aged 19, who had probably never seen a young man till her father took her to San Francisco the other day to see the town. She was dressed up prettily, for the first time in her life and her silks and ribbons and the gay sights almost turned her head. But what most interested her was that hitherto unknown being—the young man. Every time she saw one she would fix her eyes earnestly on him, and she actually made several attempts to get away from the old man, that she might cultivate the acquaintance of these young gentlemen, so that he finally caught her and led her by the hand. After he got her on the boat for Vallejo, on the homeward trip, he felt pretty safe and concluded to take a drink. He took several, and in his absence the daughter made the acquaintance of two sprightly young men on the boat and she was so fascinated with male society that she made arrangements to forsake her old father and go with them. She successfully gave her father the slip when they left the boat for the cars, and the infuriated girl was stowed between them in a smoking car. But her father found her and whirled her out of that car, in the liveliest manner, and kept his hands on her till they reached home. He will not dare expose her to such peril again, and the poor girl is destined to close confinement out of the world of young men unless she runs away.
